The short answer: WordPress has two languages chosen separately: the site's (under Settings > General) and each user's dashboard (in their profile). Changing the language does not translate your text; it changes the texts of WordPress, the theme and the plugins, if they have a translation.

What changes and where

What you want to change	Where
The site's language (buttons, dates, theme texts)	Settings > General > Site Language.
The dashboard language just for you	Users > Your Profile > Language. Each user picks their own.
Date and time format, start of the week	Settings > General, further down.
The text of your pages	It does not change: you write it in the language you want. For several languages you need another solution: A multilingual WordPress site.
Plugins and themes without a translation	They stay in English, even with the rest translated.

Step by step

1Go to Settings > General and look for "Site Language".

Choose the language from the list. WordPress downloads the translation files, which takes a moment. There are Portuguese variants; choose your audience's.

Set the date and time in the settings below (format, time zone).

Each person can have the dashboard in another language, in their profile, without changing the site's.

Update the themes and plugins to bring in the latest translations:
Updating without breaking anything.

Changing the site language changes theme texts (the “Read more”, the “Leave a comment”), but not what you wrote. If the change left something odd, go back to the earlier language: nothing is lost. To translate pages with AI help, see Translating your website with AI.

For Google to understand the site's languages, WordPress's language is not enough:
hreflang and duplicate versions.

Part of the site stayed in English and you do not know why? Open a ticket with the address and the theme's name.
