Building an e-mail campaign block by block: header, text, image, button, divider and footer

E-mail Created on November 13, 2026 2 min read

The short answer: in the E-mail Marketing editor a campaign is made of six kinds of block: header, text, image, button, divider and footer. You put them in the order you want, you can ask the AI for some text, and before sending to everyone you send a test to yourself. No HTML needed.

The six blocks

Block	What it is for	Watch out
Header	Your logo or company name at the top.	Keep it small: on a phone, people want to see the message straight away.
Text	The message: what is new and why it matters.	Short sentences. The first paragraph carries the point.
Image	A photo of the product, the dish, the event.	Never the whole message in one image: many people read with images turned off.
Button	The action you want: view, buy, book, sign up.	One main button, with a verb, going to the right page.
Divider	A line between parts.	It gives the eye a rest. It is not filler.
Footer	Who is sending, why the person gets it and the unsubscribe link.	Never hidden, never removed.

An order that works

1. Header with your logo.

2. Text with a greeting and the news in two or three sentences. There is always text before the images.

3. Image that shows what the text said.

4. Button with the main action, for example «See what is new».

5. Divider and footer, with a line such as «You are receiving this because you joined our list» and the unsubscribe link.

One goal per campaign

The usual mistake is trying to say everything at once: three offers, two news items and five buttons. The reader picks none of them. Choose one thing you want the person to do and build the blocks around it. The rest can wait for the next campaign.

Write to one person, by name.
A greeting with the reader's name reads like a conversation, not a leaflet.

Before sending to everyone, send the test to yourself and open it on your phone.
That is where a button that does not fit or a heavy image shows up. See what to check in the test. If you want to know what happens behind the design, read the HTML e-mail that displays everywhere.
